Dear Wedding MC,

One of the most common questions every Wedding MC asks is, “What is the order of wedding speeches and toasts?”

The order of wedding speeches and toasts at a wedding event - engagement party, rehearsal dinner, and wedding reception - is different for each event.

As Wedding MC you'll be responsible for following the order of wedding speeches and toasts at the wedding reception so here are some tips to use as a guide...

Who Toasts At The Wedding Reception?

The order of toasts at the wedding reception is different than the order of toasts at other wedding events.

The good news is that order of toasts - and the order of wedding speeches - is entirely up to the wedding planners.

If you're the Wedding MC, you'll meet with the wedding planners and note down on your wedding agenda the order of toasts and speeches the wedding planners agree to.

Most wedding toasts are preceded by a short wedding speech - usually a few minutes in length.

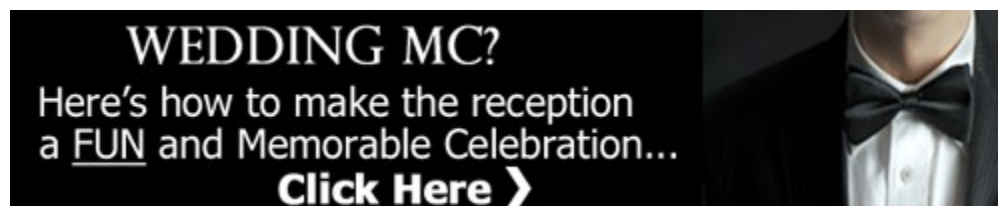

The wedding speech concludes with the wedding toast.

Traditional English Wedding: Order of Toasts and Speeches

For a traditional English wedding, the order of wedding speeches - which include toasts - is as follows:

1. Father of the Bride
2. Groom
3. Best Man

The Best Man's speech is primarily about the groom. The Best Man can also respond to the toast to the bridesmaids that the groom gave in his wedding thank you speech.

Suggested Order of Toasts and Wedding Speeches

While there is no definitive order of speeches that must be strictly adhered to, a suggested order of wedding speeches - and accompanying toasts - for discussion purposes with the wedding planners could be as follows:

1. Best Man
2. Father of the Groom
3. Father of the Bride
4. Groom
5. Bride
6. Friends and relatives
7. Maid or Matron of Honor
8. Bridesmaids
9. Mother of the Groom
10. Mother of the Bride

The Best Man usually gives the first toast to the bride and groom. It's the only toast that is expected at the wedding reception.

All other toasts at the wedding reception are optional and their inclusion is at the discretion of the wedding planners.

Who Do You Toast?

Generally, each wedding speaker will toast both the bride and groom after his or her speech.

The following suggested order of toasts can also be used as a guide for the order of wedding speeches since the wedding toast and wedding speech usually go together. Keep in mind though, that some toasts are simply introduced with a short preamble and not a wedding speech.

There may be situations where special toasts are proposed to either the bride or groom or both.

Here are some examples of who to toast depending upon each participant's role at the wedding reception:

✔ The Father of the Bride may toast the bride and groom.

He may toast the bride on behalf of himself or on behalf of himself and his wife.

He may toast the groom's family and welcome them.

The Father of the Bride may also propose separate toasts to the groom and to the wedding party and guests.

✔ The Father of the Groom may offer toasts to the groom, the bride and groom, and to the bride's parents.

In toasting the bride's parents, the father of the groom may thank them for their hospitality and let them know that he welcomes the opportunity to strengthen the friendship between the parents.

✔ The Best Man toasts the bride and groom

✔ The Maid (or Matron) of Honor toasts the bride

✔ The Bride toasts her handsome groom

✔ The Groom toasts his beautiful bride and might also offer a toast to the bridesmaids

Keep in mind the wedding reception is a celebration and many people may wish to honor the bride and groom with a toast.

At some point during the wedding speeches and toasts, you may also open the event to those wedding guests - including close friends, relatives, and grandparents - who want to toast the bride and groom.

Be aware though that “open” speeches and toasts can be long-winded and cause the event to drag on and take up the time of other events.

Special Toast To The Hosts

If there are wedding speeches and toasts at the wedding reception, one special tribute that could be included in the order of toasts is a special toast to the hosts - who traditionally are the bride's parents.

The wedding planners can select who will make this special toast to the hosts - it could be the Best Man or the Wedding MC, for example.

This toast doesn't need to be preceded by a long speech.

Instead, it can be a short acknowledgement - and heartfelt thanks - for arranging such an outstanding event.

The hosts have contributed time and money to making the wedding reception a special occasion for the bride and groom.

So be sure to suggest to the wedding planners that a special tribute to honor the hosts be included in the order of toasts.

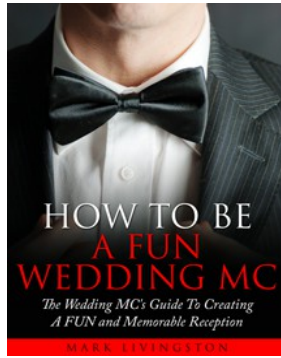

Speeches and toasts are just a small part of the reception.

As Wedding MC you'll have to know what to do and what to say as the events unfold - from the moment the reception room opens to the final farewell.

Most importantly, you'll amaze the bride and groom and the guests when you know....
